The Strike was with Us.

Yesterday brought no real change in the labor situation at the Stearns woolen mill. Work went on with strikersBreakers in the same happy-go-lucky spirit, and in all branches of the business it was continued. The罢工ers remained on the job, and although negotiations were in progress, there was no indication of their return to work. There was a feeling among the workers that the strike was here to stay, and that a new order of things would be established. The change in the employees' attitudes was noted, and it was realized that a new era had begun. The strike, which had seemed so temporary, was now seen as a permanent fixture.

The Strike at the Stearns Mill.

The Stearns mill was the center of attention yesterday. The workers were determined to carry through with their strike, and the company refused to give in. The atmosphere was tense, with the workers showing their determination to fight for their rights. The strike was spreading, and the company was facing the prospect of an extended conflict. The workers were ready to suffer, and the company was determined to keep the mill running.

The Strike and the Woolen Industry.

The woolen industry was feeling the effects of the strike. The workers were on strike, and the company was unable to produce the woolen goods. The strike was causing a shortage of goods, and the company was losing money. The Woolen industry was in a state of turmoil, with the workers demanding better working conditions and the company resisting.

The Strike and the Economy.

The strike was having a negative impact on the economy. The woolen goods were not being produced, and the workers were not being paid. The strike was causing a shortage of goods, and the company was losing money. The economy was feeling the effects of the strike, with the workers demanding better working conditions and the company resisting.

The Strike and the Future.

The strike was a turning point in the woolen industry. The workers were determined to fight for their rights, and the company was determined to keep the mill running. The strike was a test of the workers' resolve, and the company's determination. The strike was a moment of change, and the future was uncertain. The strike was a moment of decision, and the economy was in a state of flux.