After lasting nearly thirty days on the street, the tramp which originated through disagree-men between two railroad employees, on the one side, and the twenty-five men who were working on the river ferry on the other, was about to be broken up at last, for the remaining night. Last evening, what practically amounted to a compromise was arrived at by the two parties, and in addition to the acceptance of a certain number of officers, a meeting was held on the ferry, and there it is likely that the troubles will be over. The ferry boat No. 2, by the Ypsilanti Central Railroad, and the freight hands, who place in the hands of the occupants of boat a certain amount of green paper bills, are all that they have to do so that they can get the tramps enough to eat and clothing to wear.

These measures for peace, and they were in the main of the kind, were brought to bear on the city last evening, but at the same time

The meeting took place on the ferry, and as far as

The meeting which was held on the ferry, and as far as

The meeting, which was held on the ferry, and as far as

The meeting, which was held on the ferry, and as far as

The meeting, which was held on the ferry, and as far as