The doctrine of contributory negligence is a defense to liability. It is based on the principle that if a person is partly at fault for their own injury, they should not be able to recover damages. In order for contributory negligence to be applicable, the plaintiff must have been negligent to some degree and their negligence must have contributed to the injury. The doctrine is intended to encourage people to exercise reasonable care to avoid injuries, as it holds that if a person is partly at fault, they should not be able to recover.
CIVIL LIABILITY

CRIME AND FORG

The material in this page is copyrighted and cannot be reproduced without permission.

The text in this page is protected by copyright law and cannot be reproduced without permission.

All rights reserved.

[Copyright Notice]
CIVIL LIABILITY

CREDIT AND TOL"
CIVIL LIABILITY

CRIME AND TORM
THINGS AND TO THE CONSCIOUSNESS DEVELOPMENT OF THE LAW AND

I see the history of the legal development of the law of

At this point to order the progression of the Roman

To the progress and development of the law, I feel that the history of many of the

The progress and development of the law were realized. For the

To the progress and development of the law, I feel that the history of many of the

The progress and development of the law were realized. For the

To the progress and development of the law, I feel that the history of many of the

The progress and development of the law were realized. For the

To the progress and development of the law, I feel that the history of many of the

The progress and development of the law were realized. For the

To the progress and development of the law, I feel that the history of many of the

The progress and development of the law were realized. For the

To the progress and development of the law, I feel that the history of many of the